

Study Business and Management in the UK

Why study business and MBA in the UK?

If you're looking for a career in the business world, you'll give yourself a head start by studying in the UK.

The UK's location between the American and Asian time zones has helped it to become a global hub for industries including finance, trading, management consultancy, marketing and accountancy. Many international financial institutions have their European or global headquarters here, so the opportunities for students and employees to build their experience are unparalleled.

As a student in the UK, you'll be exposed to these industries first-hand, learning from leading minds and making connections with influential people.

The UK is home to some of the world's top business schools. You'll find courses in subjects such as accounting, business administration, human resources, marketing and financial management at universities and colleges across the country, plus there are more than 100 dedicated business schools.

Many courses give you the chance to gain practical experience, with work placements lasting up to a year (check that your visa status allows you to do a work placement at the UK Visas and Immigration website). There's a growing emphasis on entrepreneurship too – many universities and colleges have entrepreneurship programmes and enterprise centres to help you.

In this video, Sir Richard Branson, founder of Virgin Group, tells us what's great about doing business in the UK.
